After saving Alfa Romeo from oblivion in 1987, it took Fiat nearly five years to debut the first new Alfa produced under its control. This is the story of how the competition versions of the 155/156/147 family of cars were developed and subsequently raced to many championship titles and race wins. Alfa Romeo's 155 saloon was a comprehensively successful racing touring car that won the German and world-wide DTM Championship, and later ITC races. The model also took on

Brand Revolution goes against the traditional approaches to brand management, and shows the need for a radical shift in the way we think about marketing. It puts into practice an original method developed over years of consulting with some of Europe's top luxury brands, as well as the author's experience teaching business and marketing to students and professionals in Europe, the UK, and the United States.

Classical marketing sees a brand as an attempt to express a set of core values. This conventional approach fails to grasp that the content of these core values does not (and indeed cannot) define a brand's identity. Instead, the identity of a brand is something which is affected by the relationship with the consumer, the end user, and is constantly in flux.

Organizations need to know how to react to changes in their reputation to manage their brand identity. Drawing on communication theory, which uses identity as a function and result of relationships, Brand Revolution begins with an in-depth exploration of the concept of identity, and then applies this new understanding to marketing and brands. It offers a critical yet constructive new method, the "fingerprinting method," for analyzing brands and helping them grow and change in a constantly evolving market. With big brand case studies such as L'Oreal and Jaguar, the author draws on
