Callanish I is just one of over twenty megalithic sites on Lewis. The stones are intricately connected to the landscape, as with many megalithic ceremonial complexes. in the case of Callanish I, the stones share an intimate relationship with both the range of hills known as the 'sleeping beauty' or the 'old woman of the moors'. When the moon reaches it's southern extreme each 18.6 years it is seen to rise from behind the sacred hill range and skim the horizon for four hours till it gently ...
