Marie de France is one of the most intriguing figures in medieval European literature. She is one of the first recorded female authors in Europe and yet her identity is a mystery. All we know about her is an elusive statement which she makes in the epilogue to one of her works, the Fables : 'Marie ai nun, si sui de France' [Marie is my name and I am from France] (f. 67r, digitised image 2).

The Lays and Fables of Marie de France — The British Library

Marie de France's Lais were read in her own time, her French is "easy" (a widely-read Anglo-Norman literary language) and the poems are relatively short (the longest is only about a sixth as long as the verse romances being written at the same time by Chrétien de Troyes); readers usually seem to have read them in French, though they were translated, for example, into Old Norse and read in ...

Marie de France—Wikipedia

Marie de France (fl. 1160-1210) [3] est une poétesse de la « Renaissance du XII e siècle », la première femme de lettres en Occident à écrire en langue vulgaire.Elle appartient à la seconde génération des auteurs qui ont inventé l'amour courtois. Ses courts récits en vers, improprement appelés Lais de Marie de France, sont une adaptation en langue d'oïl de la matière de Bretagne.

Marie de France (poétesse) — Wikipédia

Marie de France gives women little power or control in this story, leaving both of the lovers at the mercy of Eliduc. An excellent example of reversed gender roles is portrayed in Marie de France's Lay of Sir Lanval. Lanval is described as loyal, handsome knight, yet he is lonely and sad.
