The Thirty Years War was largely the war of the Counter-Reformation. It was started in 1618 by Ferdinand II, whose rise to the monarchy was marked by great dubiety on the part of his German Electors, among others. He wanted lands lost during the Reformation returned to the Church (Edict of Restitution), as well as the reconversion of Franco-Spanish War (1635–1659) The Thirty Years' War was a conflict primarily fought in Central Europe from 1618 to 1648; estimates of total military and civilian deaths range from 4.5 to 8 million, mostly from disease or starvation. In some areas of Germany, it has been suggested up to 60% of the population died.

Ferdinand called this an act of war (Defenestration of Prague) and invaded Bohemia. War after war lasted for thirty years, hence the name. The Thirty Years' War resulted in Germany losing forty percent of its population, or around eight million people. Finally, with the Peace of Westphalia in 1648, the war ended.

Peter Wilson's book, first published in the UK as Europe's Tragedy: A History of the Thirty Years War, then in the US as The Thirty Years War: Europe's Tragedy, and most recently in paperback as Europe's Tragedy: A New History of the Thirty Years War, is the best general history of the war. It, however, deals extensively with the politics of the period, although it does not neglect the military side of things.
